THE LETTERS OF THE RAMBAM

"He Knows Nothing"? Rulings, Rumours & a Troubled Dayan

Letter to Rav Pinehas, Part 3

Source: Igrot HaRambam: the letter to Rav Pinchas ben Meshullam HaDayan of Alexandria (Hebrew original, Shilat edition), Sections 3–5 and conclusion

Shiur: Given by Dayan Daniel Kada on Zoom, Tuesday 1 April 2025. The last class on the Rambam's letters before Pesach

These notes are based on the Sofer.ai transcript of the recording.

Recap

The fifth letter of the series (after Ovadia, astrology, Ibn Jabbar and Kiddush Hashem): to Rav Pinchas, who came from Provence to become dayan of Alexandria. The Rambam was instrumental in his appointment, "but they didn't see eye to eye on many things."

Part	Content
1	Be confident in halachah; rule by the truth, not by what people want to hear. Pinchas gave in to people demanding washing after an emission before Torah and prayer. Not required for Torah, and for prayer only a custom, "and I myself am particular about this custom." "I'm not angry, but I did take offence"
2	The Mishneh Torah: no names (a chibbur, not a perush; names already in the introduction; names would make laws look like one man's opinion); people err ("I can't walk around with my book"); Talmud study ("I teach Talmud a lot"); sources (all from Chazal; the story of the forgotten source, and his agmat nefesh that he never wrote them down)
3	Specific questions: tonight
4	Pinchas's troubles at home: tonight
5	A technical question on *kiddushin: tonight

Part 3: The Specific Questions

a) "Did you say in public that I know nothing?"

Pinchas, quoted verbatim:

You said in public about so-and-so, the dayan of Alexandria, that he knows nothing and is not proficient in Talmud. Why would you say such a thing? And I asked you many questions, and you never answered. (And in a later letter:) Please teach me everything I asked.

Listen carefully to my answer. I never said anything of the sort, because I don't lie, and it isn't true: you do know.

So what did he say? "He's admitting something." To understand it, some background.

Background: two kinds of property a wife brings into a marriage

	nichsei melog נכסי מלוג	nichsei tzon barzel נכסי צאן ברזל ("iron sheep")
Ownership	Stays hers	Stays in her name
Income (e.g. rent)	Goes to the husband	Goes to the husband
Rise or fall in value	Hers. A house worth £100k at the wedding and £200k at a divorce five years later: the gain is hers; a loss is too	The husband is responsible. He must return the full value, even if it burned down or lost value
For the husband	Benefit, no responsibility	Benefit and responsibility

(Cash generally goes in the nedunya, the dowry; this is about property.)

The case of the gold jewellery

- In a dispute over a piece of gold jewellery, Pinchas had ruled that it was tzon barzel: the husband is responsible for it.
- Then the husband, the son-in-law of Abu al-Faraj, came back: *I don't want responsibility. I want it reclassified as melog.
- The Rambam heard that Pinchas ruled he could, and could force it on the wife: "the best of both worlds" for the husband, all the benefit and none of the responsibility.

I told Abu al-Faraj, the father-in-law: I don't believe Pinchas would rule like that. If he did, bring me proof.

Then came a letter signed by two responsible witnesses: Pinchas had ruled publicly that any husband may convert tzon barzel into melog.

> I was astonished at once. That isn't the halachah. What comes in under one law מיד תמהתי: stays under that law. If they both agree, that's different, but the husband can't force it on the wife.

"There's no discussion about this. He's wrong." With the Rambam were another dayan and three or four others; he showed them the letter, and everyone was astonished.

What the Rambam actually said

Don't be surprised: Pinchas comes from Provence, from France. All the Jews in Christian countries, even their great rabbis, aren't experts in practical law.

	Islamic lands (Egypt)	Christian lands (Provence, France)
Jewish courts	Proper, permanent *batei din	Not allowed; makeshift batei din
Monetary and marital cases	Daily: "bread and butter"	Rare; "not on their fingertips"
Result	Answer readily	Take a long time, must search and analyse, and can err

His analogy: "If the Temple were rebuilt today and you came running to me with a practical question about a sacrifice, I couldn't answer straight away. I'd have to search, think, analyse, because it isn't something we do regularly."

The Gemara's point: you can master all the books, but you can't compare even a sage who knows the whole Torah to someone who has faced practical questions. "Any rabbi will tell you they remember best what they've taught and what they've been asked." Practical questions force you to think things through.

"God testifies that this is exactly what happened. I'm not adding or subtracting."

So the rumour evolved from "he comes from a country without regular courts, so he struggled and got it wrong" into "the Rambam says he knows nothing."

Was it lashon hara?

The Rambam doesn't apologise. Why wasn't it lashon hara?

- Saying a ruling is wrong isn't lashon hara. If someone says Rabbi X told me this is the halachah and you know it isn't, saying that rabbi is wrong is giving the correct ruling.
- Adding "he's from France, where they have no batei din" depends on tone. Said derogatorily ("these Ashkenazim, they know nothing"), it might be. Said to explain, understand their culture; they lack the experience we dayanim in Fustat have, it isn't. "He's not saying it to demean Pinchas, just to explain."

b) "You never answer my questions"

I swear I don't know of any question you asked that I didn't answer, except one, about marriage, which came while I was ill. I'll answer it at the end of this letter.

The rest:

What Pinchas asked	The Rambam's response
One question, over and over (its content isn't stated)	"You harassed me with this question." I gave my answer. Do what you want. Stop asking
A question about a get	I answered with proofs; you came back: I still don't see why you said it's kosher. I kept quiet
Anything else	Perhaps lost in the post. Ask again

My way, always: when I debate with someone and see he won't budge or consider the other side, I fall silent and leave him to his view.

"An important principle in life. If you're trying to teach someone, you give your opinion, and they persist, leave them and move on. Don't waste your time."

The Rabbi's own pre-Pesach example:

"A week ago someone asked me: can you buy Coca-Cola? I said yes. Full stop. Last night he texted: I asked another rabbi and he was very surprised at your ruling. Can you explain your reasoning? I didn't answer. Every year I get this. You have to know when to move on."

c) The widow and the three signatures

A widow was disputing a property (a house or courtyard) with her children. The ruling: she needn't take an oath, because she's in possession, so the children can't claim it. The Rambam answered and had two other dayanim sign with him.

Background:

	תשובה, responsum	פסק, ruling
What	A question sent from afar; you give your opinion	The parties appear before you
Who signs	The rabbi alone	All three dayanim

This was a responsum from Alexandria to Fustat, so Pinchas asked: why three signatures?

You're right; normally I'd sign alone. But I was told that if only I signed, you'd tell the secular judge: this rabbi says that, I say otherwise; who's right? and the case wouldn't come out correctly. With three rabbis, your view would be the minority. So I forwent my honour and signed with the others to make sure the ruling stood.

"Don't accuse her." Pinchas had suggested the widow wasn't afraid to swear, so of course she'd claim what she claimed.

How dare you say that about a Jew? How can a sage like you say it? Only the wicked aren't afraid to take an oath. Don't accuse this woman of being one of them.

d) The get sent by agent

Background 1: a get by agent.

- A get can be handed over directly or via a shaliach, "from one end of the earth to the other." "We do this nowadays all the time; we send gittin to Israel."

- She is divorced only when the get reaches her hand. Until then anything can cancel it: the agent resigns, dies, falls ill, loses it, or the husband retracts, without even telling the agent.

- "A terrible thing to do," so nowadays the husband takes a full oath not to retract the agency.

Background 2: conditions in a get. (Theoretical: "this is avoided nowadays for many reasons.")

	"על מנת", "on condition that"	Other wording
Takes effect	Now. Once she fulfils the condition (say, delivering a parcel to someone), she is divorced retroactively from today	Only once the condition is fulfilled
Can she remarry meanwhile?	Yes	No
Formal requirements	None: very easy	Strict: double the condition (tenai kaful), state the positive before the negative, etc.

The case: the same son-in-law of Abu al-Faraj came to the Rambam: Abu al-Faraj treated me badly; he made me divorce his daughter, though she never asked for it. While talking with him, the Rambam realised the get was being sent by agent.

So, cleverly, he wrote to Abu al-Faraj: has your daughter received the get yet? Not yet, came the answer, with the text of the get and the agency. "Don't delay. Make sure she receives it quickly."

Two criticisms of Pinchas:

1. You dawdled. A get by agent can be annulled at any moment: the agent could die, be killed, drown at sea, be lost. "What use is a dayan who doesn't think proactively and tell her to go and receive her get?"

2. You mixed the formulas. You used al menat and doubled the condition with positive before negative. Unnecessary: al menat needs none of that. "It doesn't actually invalidate anything, but it's not appropriate for someone like you to write mixed messages."

"Chacham gadol." The Rambam calls Pinchas "a great sage" four or five times in the letter. "I don't know if he literally means it, or is saying how can a great person like you keep making these mistakes? Maybe you're not as great as people say."

Part 4: Pinchas's Troubles at Home

"Much shorter; we've done the main bits." Pinchas "seems to be suffering a lot."

Trouble	The Rambam's response
Avraham goes around Alexandria saying "the Rambam is right and Pinchas is always wrong"	God knows I scolded him, by word and in writing. "He thinks he's helping me. I told him clearly: I don't want your help. Don't speak badly about Pinchas." He made him swear to stop
Abu al-Faraj says Pinchas ruled for the son-in-law because they're friendly: they eat together, and Pinchas got benefits from him ("not exactly bribes, but close")	I wrote to Abu al-Faraj: that's not why. He made a mistake, and even the Supreme Court can err, as the Torah says. "I pacified him."
"You said in public that I have an angry disposition"	"Yes, I said it." (Below)
Rumours Pinchas wants to return to "Rome", to Christian Europe (Shilat's note)	Don't. Don't leave where you're established
Abu Zikri causing trouble	Don't worry; he's powerless

"Yes, I said you're angry", "the best bit of the whole letter"

"Everywhere else he defends himself robustly. Here it seems like checkmate: Pinchas says you called me an angry person in public, and the Rambam says I won't lie. I said it."

How he gets out of it:

The Gemara: when a talmid chacham gets angry, it's the Torah that heats him: הלא כה דברי כאש, "are not My words like fire?" I was praising you in the Gemara's words: your anger is the anger of Torah.

"Fascinating." "It is difficult, I agree."

Make peace with Rabbi Daniel

The context: Pinchas's feud with Rabbi Daniel (Part 1: Daniel had ruled leniently on washing, and Pinchas opposed him).

That's what upsets me. Why don't you get on with Rabbi Daniel? He's a great person, God-fearing, and he's bringing people to do good, in Fustat and in Alexandria. Be friends; study together. If you let him teach my Mishneh Torah to others (under your leadership, of course), you could ignite so many people with the depths of Torah. I wish it would happen. Make up with each other.

"Don't go back to Europe"

"We don't have Pinchas's letters, but from everything the Rambam quotes, he seems to be going through a lot: complaining about this person and that person, the Rambam, the ruling, the people who came to him." Don't leave your place under pressure. (One line, about going "to places with armies," is unclear.)

Was "Avraham" the Rambam's son?

The Rabbi's own idea ("I just realised this now; no one says this, I have no proof"):

- When the Rambam names people he usually adds "Mar" or "Abu"; here it's just "Avraham".

- Pinchas expects the Rambam to control Avraham, and the Rambam can order him to stop and make him swear.

- The Rambam's only son was Avraham (Rabbeinu Avraham ben HaRambam; he also had a daughter).

So perhaps Avraham was the Rambam's son, zealously defending his father.

Part 5: Is Kiddushin by Money Biblical or Rabbinic?

"I don't know if you could spend a whole shiur on it, but briefly." Pinchas's unanswered question, the one that came while the Rambam was ill.

Background: three ways to betroth

Method		Source	Most opinions	The Rambam (Mishneh Torah)
כסף, money	Something of financial value	A gezeirah shavah, an extrapolation by the Sages	Biblical	Rabbinic
שטר, document	A betrothal document (not the ketubah)	Also an extrapolation from a verse	Biblical	Biblical
ביאה, relations	With intent to betroth	Explicit: ובעלה	Biblical	Biblical

The Rambam's answer

1. Go and read my Sefer HaMitzvot. Written in Arabic (we now have it in Hebrew); Sa'adia in Alexandria has a copy. It sets out 14 principles for which commandments count among the 613.

Learn those 14 principles and you'll see that everyone who counted the mitzvot before me got it wrong.

Background on counting: the Gemara says there are 613, but go through the Torah and you can find many more. So which count? Many tried, including Rabbi Abba Kira (7th–8th century) and Shlomo ibn Gabirol. The Azharot read at Minchah on Shavuot are poems counting the 613, "and they include things the Rambam says are completely wrong." (The Rabbi gave a Zoom shiur on this two or three years ago.)

2. The principle (Sefer HaMitzvot): of the 13 hermeneutic rules (said every morning at the start of Shacharit), what the Sages derive through them does not automatically become *de'oraita. It counts as biblical only where the Sages say explicitly that it is.

So:

- Relations: explicit in the verse, so biblical.

- Money: derived by gezeirah shavah, with no explicit statement, so rabbinic.

- Document: also derived. "You're right; by my principle it should be rabbinic." But the Gemara clearly treats it as *de'oraita, so he counted it biblical.

"This is a whole shiur on its own: what de'oraita and de'rabbanan mean here."

Did he retract?

Rabbeinu Avraham, the Rambam's son, says his father retracted and held that all three are biblical, as almost everyone does. "It's not clear he did. Much ink has been spilt over this."

The Close

My chieftain, don't worry about answering everything I've written. But equally, don't expect me to answer everything you write. I'm very busy and very weak. I haven't the time or strength even to read the letters I receive, let alone answer them. If you have practical questions, send them. Otherwise I have no time, because of my constant weakness, and because I need to learn a little myself.

Dated the 35th day of the Omer.

Summary of the Whole Letter

Part
1	Washing after an emission: rule by the halachah, not the crowd; washing before prayer is only a custom
2	The purpose of the Mishneh Torah: a chibbur like the Mishnah; no names, no sources, all from Chazal; study Talmud too
3	"He knows nothing"? Never said it. Pinchas got tzon barzel vs melog wrong, explained by his coming from lands without Jewish courts, said to explain, not demean. Unanswered questions: "you harassed me," and when someone won't budge, move on. Three signatures to make the widow's ruling stand; don't accuse her of a false oath. The get* by agent: act fast, and don't mix the condition formulas
4	Pinchas's troubles: the Rambam rebuked Avraham and pacified Abu al-Faraj; "angry" meant the fire of Torah; make peace with Rabbi Daniel; don't go back to Europe
5	Kiddushin* by money is rabbinic because derived law isn't automatically biblical (Sefer HaMitzvot); document is biblical because the Gemara treats it so. His son says he retracted
Close	"Don't expect me to answer everything. I'm busy and weak, and I need to learn a little myself."

Coming Up

This completes five letters, learned January to March: Ovadia, astrology, Ibn Jabbar, Kiddush Hashem and Rav Pinchas. A new series of the Rambam's letters after Pesach, including the letter to Ibn Tibbon, which seems to say the opposite about Talmud study. The class closed with a discussion of the format going forward.
